

Abstract of the Disclosure

A printable substrate with a print medium such as bond paper, thermal paper and card stock, is provided with one or more fold lines comprising intermittent sections of microperforations and non-perforated sections. The fold line defines the location for folding by weakening the print medium without causing the separation of the print medium. The substrate may be printed either before or after folding.